Is FEV1%pred (the percent of predicted forced expiratory volume in one second) associated with relapsefree survival and overall-survival in operable patients with early-stage NSCLC (non-small cell lung cancer)?

Conclusion: An FEV1 of <82% predicted value was associated with a high risk of reduced longterm survival in operable patients with early-stage NSCLC.